

As you get ready to attend celebrations - weddings, graduations, family reunions, company events and more - be extra prepared to honour the occasion.

These Myers-Briggs® type tips will help you think of special ways to recognise and show appreciation for the people around you. Happy celebrating!

ISTJ Showing appreciation may not come naturally to you. Offer more positive comments to the important people in your life.	ISFJ You likely celebrate birthdays and special events. Try not to take it personally if others do not focus on these activities.	INFJ You likely affirm and support others in their development. Remember to acknowledge their everyday actions and assistance.	INTJ Being self-reliant, you may not see the importance of regularly appreciating others. Make a point of sharing kind words and deeds.
ISTP You will likely do something for someone rather than give compliments. Give praise. Some people need to hear your appreciation.	ISFP You likely provide others with thoughtful actions and gifts. Try not to be hurt if they fail to notice or mention these efforts.	INFP Helping and appreciating others with words and actions is natural for you. Interact with other people who use the same approach.	INTP You may not naturally offer appreciation. Observe people and decide when more positive comments and actions are necessary.
ESTP You may show appreciation for others with impromptu or unexpected actions. Be sure these surprises don't disrupt someone's plans.	ESFP You likely enjoy finding or making practical gifts or sharing events. Remember, others may not like spontaneous celebrations.	ENFP You appreciate others heartily with a flurry of attention. Some people may like more private, quiet recognition.	ENTP You likely acknowledge competence and innovation. Remember to also celebrate special dates and reward people's efforts.
ESTJ You may think that work well done is its own reward. Others may need more verbal encouragement and support.	ESFJ You tend to appreciate people through traditions and celebrations. Remember, others may prefer a more casual approach.	ENFJ You likely encourage and appreciate others regularly and openly. Remember, some people prefer to be appreciated privately.	ENTJ You may not state your appreciation; rather, you rely on and expect more from people you deem competent. Offer them some praise.