

Using Self-Awareness to Fill Your Leadership Pipeline

How to Bolster Your Leadership Development Programs When Resources are Low

The Myers-Briggs® Company

Contents

- 3 There's Something Different About You
- 5 Leadership Development From the Inside Out
- 6 Strong Leadership Pipelines
- 8 Leadership Tools
- 11 Scoring and Comparing Leaders
- 12 Leadership Characteristics
- 13 From Awareness to Action

There's something different about you

Has anyone ever said that to you? Expressed in the right tone, it's one of the greatest compliments you can receive. When it comes to the leaders (and potential leaders) within your organisation, that kind of difference needs to be noticed and valued. Otherwise, people (such as your high-potential employees) may head somewhere they feel more appreciated.

Another challenge—especially for small and midsize companies who may not have an established leadership pipeline—can be identifying those leaders in the first place. Or if you do have an existing leadership pipeline, your main challenge could be fostering their development in a more innovative way.

What's the main thing you desperately need to convey to high-potential employees and leaders within your organisation? We've asked this questions to dozens of HR pros, and here's a good summary of what they've said:

“ Employees need to feel valued as people. We want them to like working here so that they stay working here as leaders in the future. ”

Organisations are scrambling to send this message because it's a huge piece of building their leadership pipeline.

Your “golden ticket” to high-potential employees’ company loyalty

You’re probably stretched pretty thin. In fact, you might be working with one eye on the clock so you’re not late for the next meeting.

But no matter how busy you are, your leadership development strategy can’t stagnate. And without some help to shake it up, your organisation—and its people—could miss out. Here are a few common pain points. Do any of these ring true for you?

- ◆ The Baby Boomers in your organisation are starting to retire and you need other employees to be ready to fill those roles

- ◆ You’re trying to figure out the best way to promote from within the company, since that leads to stronger company culture and loyalty
- ◆ You aren’t sure how to convey to your high-potential employees that they’re needed
- ◆ You have a slim budget for employee engagement and aren’t sure how to get the most out of it

There’s a surefire way to check all four pain points of your list: give them something of lifetime value—self-awareness.

Burning questions about leadership development

Take some time to think about each question below. Jot down your thoughts if it helps. Your answers will lay the foundation for your new and improved leadership pipeline.

- ◆ How do you identify potential leaders?
- ◆ Do you know which qualities to look for in potential leaders?
- ◆ Once you find potential leaders, how will you create individual development plans?
- ◆ How do you measure leaders’ successes once they’re part of the program?

Leadership development that works from the inside out

Have you ever seen one of those movies where the main character transforms over the course of the movie from mediocre to amazing? It's not that she was ever really mediocre to begin with—it's just that she needed a little self-awareness to realise her full potential.

Think of your leadership development strategy like that. And before we get any further, this isn't about waiting for ho-hum staff members to "find themselves" at the company's expense. It's about showing leaders what they're made of.

According to a Deloitte report, 89% of leaders know their organisation's future depends on the effectiveness of their leadership pipelines.¹

But only 13% of HR leaders are confident in their succession plans. And a whopping 54% report damage to their businesses due to talent shortages.²

So how can you transform your organisation's potential leaders (or pinpoint them in the first place) to build your leadership pipeline?

Often 360-degree evaluations are used to build self-awareness.

But detailed true/false assessments are a better channel to self-awareness. They're simple, fast and they get the job done well. In-depth self-assessments like the CPI 260[®] tool have the highest validity compared to other personality assessments.

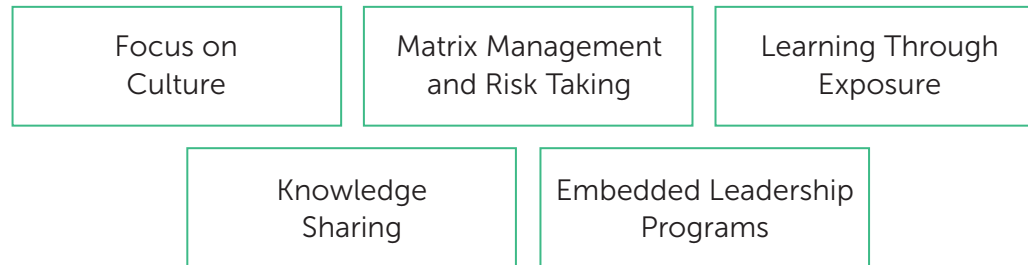

Tools like these are capable of predicting important patterns like manager performance and how dependable an employee is. They enable you to gather enough data to help your leaders improve where they need it most.

¹Find more info about the Deloitte report here.

²That's according to this survey of 2,200 global HR leaders.

Want a strong leadership pipeline? Here's what really matters.

Whether you utilise a personality assessment or not, some core elements of a strong leadership pipeline need to be top of mind from the get-go. According to Harvard Business Review \(HBR\), this is what really matters:

In addition, organisations with a strong pipeline bring in 37% more revenue per employee and are four times more likely to be efficient (measured through profitability).

So now that we've established what a good pipeline should include, how do you fill it?

Impacting your leadership pipeline in under an hour

One of the goals of a leadership assessment like the CPI 260® tool is to discover the strengths and behaviours you'd like potential leaders to continue. Often, their management style includes nuances that help them succeed as leaders. Likewise, the right tool can also help you figure out what they need to improve to prepare for future leadership roles.

Maybe you see a lot of potential in your project manager, but he needs to work on his sensitivity to others' needs. Or perhaps there's a VP on your team who views conflict as a bad thing instead of as an opportunity to make things better. Once an assessment reveals these issues, you can more thoroughly form your leadership development strategy for that individual. You'll have enough info so that everything from workshops to recommended reading can be successfully modified for each person.

It's about more than just grooming the next CEO or pinpointing a couple of superstars—it's equipping potential leaders with tactics they can use to transform into the person they want to become. From there, you're left with a leadership pipeline filled with capable people who are enthusiastic about being part of the team.

And what about individuals who are not cut out for the pipeline or simply don't want to be included? No problem. They're still valuable as team members with their unique skills. But now you know to place your focus elsewhere for your specific pipeline plans.

Look for a leadership tool that:

- ◆ Provides a detailed portrait of individuals' personal and work-related characteristics
- ◆ Helps individuals better understand themselves and how they interact with others
- ◆ Offers real-life applications and practical insights for training, development and coaching by presenting suggested next steps
- ◆ Can be taken multiple times for ongoing feedback on performance (compared to relying solely on traditional manager feedback)
- ◆ Uses constructive comparison techniques by revealing how individuals score compared to counterparts in the same industry

Let's go back to the CPI 260® assessment as an example. It uses a system of 29 scales measuring each person's responses, grouped into five leadership categories: self-management, dealing with others, motivations and thinking styles, personal characteristics and work-related measures.

Some of the 260 true/false questions might even seem out of place in a business or leadership context, but they're all methodically devised and calculated. On average, it takes about 35 minutes to complete the CPI 260® assessment from start to finish. That's enough time to get plenty of unbiased personality data.

Once the person facilitating the CPI 260® assessment goes through the results, you get a wealth of in-depth information that can be transformative for potential leaders.

The CPI 260® assessment was labeled "freakishly accurate" by Business Insider. It's like we spoke with the people closest to you and laid everything out on the table. It's even warranted a "Did you talk to one of my friends or something?" response on a few occasions. Now that's a good way to get the ball rolling on your leadership development strategy.

What? So what? Now what?

When you use a tool like this to help bolster your leadership pipeline, you're asking each person to tackle three big questions:

If the assessment provides enough data the answers to these questions will be relatively easy to uncover. In fact, the “what?/so what?/now what?” trio can easily morph into a pillar of your leadership development plan. You can even implement progress trackers and have each person take the assessment again in 6 to 12 months to gauge any incremental changes.

Measuring true managerial potential, flexibility, and more

After an individual takes the CPI 260[®] assessment, the facilitator can generate the [CPI 260[®] Client Feedback Report](#), which gives a true-to-life picture of each person's temperament and behaviour.

A lifestyle diagram plots scores to indicate whether the person's style is an implementer, innovator, supporter, or visualiser. The report offers detailed insight into how he or she scored on 29 scales including Empathy, Flexibility, Managerial Potential, Achievement via Conformance, Creative Temperament and more.

For example, your high-potential team members might score higher on the Achievement via Independence scale. This means they probably prefer independent thinking work and that they're good at defining personal goals.

Alternately, other high-potential employees might score lower than average on this same scale. They probably experience difficulty in vague, unstructured situations—and they need others to specify goals or methods for them.

And that's just one of the scales. The CPI 260[®] tool is like getting the results of 29 separate assessments all in one.

How do your leaders score compared to other leaders?

There's something distinctly different about high-performing employees and leaders.

They're walking the line, climbing the ladder and building an empire (or at least a department). For them to be truly great, they need to know how they score compared to other leaders.

You can generate a detailed coaching report [\[the CPI 260[®] Coaching Report for Leaders\]](#) to help high-potential employees develop strengths, target areas for improvement, set goals and plan next steps. Their answers are highly predictive of managerial competencies, with five decades of empirical research to back that up.

In the CPI 260[®] Manual, you can compare leaders' responses to responses from large groups of successful managers and executives, both male and female. You gauge how they score next to "the best and the brightest" who—by conventional standards—are on track for continued success and career advancement.³

A person's responses to the CPI 260[®] assessment are highly predictive of managerial competencies.

³The CPI 260[®] Coaching Report for Leaders is based on data collected at the Center for Creative Leadership[®] (CCL[®]) from more than 5,600 workshop participants enrolled in CCL's Leadership Development Program from 1995 to 1996. Center for Creative Leadership and CCL are registered trademarks of the Center for Creative Leadership.

Eye-opening feedback on leadership characteristics

Leadership characteristics can be organised into these five core performance areas:

- ◆ Self-management: self-awareness, self-control, resilience
- ◆ Organisational capabilities: use of power and authority, comfort with organisational structures, responsibility/accountability, decisiveness
- ◆ Team building and teamwork: interpersonal skill, understanding others, capacity for collaboration, working with/through others
- ◆ Problem solving: creativity, handling sensitive problems, action orientation
- ◆ Sustaining the vision: self-confidence, managing change, influence, comfort with visibility

For example, if a member of your team needs to develop their capacity for collaboration, you can help them improve for the better in that specific area. Without that insider info, you won't know how to help them and they won't know how to develop.

You can even narrow down the scores to show comparative information only for leaders in your industry. From there, you can work with a facilitator to find out what a leader's profile looks like for a specific position (e.g., engineer or financial executive). You can also compare the average scores of individuals in different occupations (such as salespeople vs. accountants) to learn which qualities are more prevalent for each. With the CPI 260[®] assessment, the normative samples of nearly 6,000 leaders are available for comparison.

“The CPI 260[®] assessment stands out from similar assessments in its thoroughness, the wide spectrum of factors it covers, and the fact that it's easy to interpret.”

Matthew Lesser
Senior Operations Manager
Ambassador Enterprises

From awareness to action

The right assessment offers practical insights and suggested action steps, so you spend less time trying to understand endless reports and more time helping people move forward and filling your leadership pipeline. Once your organisation has a game plan for the pipeline, leaders at all levels can talk about strengths and weaknesses without offending anyone or getting too personal because they have a common language to address issues.

To sum it up: the CPI 260[®] assessment lets you be the advocate, the coach and cheerleader for all your high-potential employees.

The CPI 260[®] Assessment Explained to Your Employees in 6 Sentences

The CPI 260[®] assessment measures personality characteristics. It provides an accurate description of you, the same way a person who knows you well would describe you. This description includes your favourable and unfavourable characteristics.

Your results on the CPI 260[®] assessment can help you understand how your personality influences work-related situations. The assessment can also help you discover ways to improve as a leader. It's based on more than 55 years of research and is used internationally.

Helpful links if you're considering the CPI 260[®] assessment to fast-track your leadership pipeline:

Precision Coaching & Development Guide

[CPI 260[®] Client Feedback Sample Report](#)

[CPI 260[®] Public Certification Program](#)

7 Competencies for Effective, Productive Leaders eBook

Copyright 2017 by CPP, Inc. All rights reserved. Myers-Briggs and the Myers-Briggs logos are trademarks or registered trademarks of The Myers & Briggs Foundation in the United States and other countries. California Psychological Inventory, CPI, CPI 260, and the CPI, CPI 260, and CPP logos are trademarks or registered trademarks of CPP, Inc., in the United States and other countries.